To Whom It May Concern:

An early adopter, as well as an astute problem-solver, Danielle has a passion for learning that inspires others. Her career has led her to teach herself Web development, the management of virtual tradeshows and the application of social media tools in the area of public relations. She is a critical thinker and her clients and colleagues trust her counsel.

Danielle Oser and I worked together at O'Connor and Partners more than ten years ago. A person who values relationships and uses social media tools to stay in touch, Danielle has remained connected to me online, and occasionally in person, even when our careers and personal lives took us in different directions both geographically and professionally.

When Danielle shared her interest in Lindenwood University's master's degree program in digital and multimedia communications, I had two thoughts: one, I knew this was the perfect program in which Danielle could enhance and deepen her knowledge, as well as connect with classmates for collaboration and idea-sharing. Two, I was extremely jealous. Lindenwood is my alma-mater and were I not 800 miles away, I'd be enrolling in the program right alongside my friend and colleague.

Danielle devotes great passion and effort to anything she undertakes. I highly recommend her for this program and any scholarship for which she may be eligible.

Sincerely,
